THE UNITED STATES ARMY AND RELIGION

The Constitution of the United States guarantees that the citizens – even its citizens who have joined the military – will have the opportunity to exercise their religion freely. The concept of religious freedom and tolerance is one of the founding principle of our Nation, so each of the Armed Forces have chaplains who represent a broad range of faith expressions. One of their primary tasks is to ensure each Soldier, Sailor, Airmen or Marine has the opportunity to meet for worship, to pray, and to be part of the faith community as they desire. The chaplains extend this protection of “free exercise rights” to all military members regardless of their background.

Religious support in the Army is the responsibility of the commander; the chaplain executes the commander’s plan. The chaplains, assisted by an enlisted Soldier known as a “chaplain’s assistant” conduct worship, prayer services, scripture study and religious counseling. They visit their Soldiers in the hospital, accompany their Soldiers at physical training, and deploy with them to combat – they are truly present at every stage of a Soldier’s life.

Chaplains are endorsed by their respective faith groups and possess at least a Master of Divinity degree or its equivalent. They typically have several years of experience as a minister, priest, rabbi or imam before they come in the Army. There are currently about 3,000 Army Chaplains serving in Active, Reserve and National Guard components around the world.
